The filament looks bright in this photograph but we used a flash attachment. From the shooter's perspective the dot was too heavily covered and its outline was bulbous.

The safety mechanism resembled the hammer of a lever-action rifle and was actuated automatically each time the gun was pumped. The safety was turned off in a motion replicating the cocking of the hammer. The Mossy Oak Breakup was catchy and the buttpad looked like it would soak up magnum recoil. Three spacers were provided to extend length of pull but the Walther was
